Cars Accidents

Car crashes happen a lot, and it's important to know why so we can avoid them. One big reason is when drivers get distracted. That means doing things like texting, talking on the phone, or eating while driving, which takes their attention away from the road. Another cause is when drivers go too fast. When they go over the speed limit, they don't have enough time to react if something unexpected happens. Drinking alcohol or using drugs and then driving is also a big problem. It makes people's judgment and coordination worse, so they can't drive safely. Lastly, new drivers who don't have much experience are more likely to get into crashes. They may not know how to make good decisions or handle tricky situations on the road. By understanding these common causes, young drivers can be more careful and responsible when they drive, keeping themselves and others safe
