Wishing it had happened differently

Kate's alarm clock did not go off this morning. She really wishes it had gone off. If it did ring like it was supposed to, she wouldn't have been late for work. And if she hadn't been late, her boss would not have given her a warning. Her son, Benny, did not save his History paper on his computer yesterday. He really wishes he had remembered to save it. If he had remembered to save it, he would have been able to give it to his teacher today. And if he had handed it in today, he wouldn't have got in trouble. Kate and her son wish things had happened differently.
