Discussion

You are going to have dinner in a good restaurant with a group of students in your class. Discuss what to eat.

Decide where to go out for a meal and what to order at that restaurant. One of each group reports back to the class about your discussion.

- Where do you usually go when you eat out?

- What is your favorite restaurant near where you live?

- How often do you eat out?

- Who do you usually go with when you eat out?

- What is your favorite appetizer? (Main Course –Dessert)

- Which foods did you enjoy the most?

- What is your favorite restaurant and why?

Today, many people in developed countries tend to eat for pleasure rather than for survival.

Based on the fact that the world is focusing more on ethnic food, today we have the capacity to achieve better understanding of cultural differences, history, and food.

Ethnic foods are defined as foods originating from a heritage and culture of an ethnic group who use their knowledge of local ingredients of plants and/or animal sources.

ethnic food is one that applies to the particular and specific food of a region or community on the planet.

Teaching Tip

Tell students that a speaker's body language can help them understand the speaker's meaning, and that using body language when speaking can help make themselves understood. However, they should be careful when traveling in a foreign country, as what is acceptable and/or meaningful in one place can be offensive in another.

Additional Activity

Take a class survey. Have students say the types of ethnic foods they have eaten. See how many types they can list according to ethnicity or type of restaurant (for example, Japanese, Italian, steakhouse, seafood) and category (for example, sushi, pasta, steak, seafood). Have students vote on their favorite type of food.

Project: Design a Restaurant

Organize students into small groups to design a restaurant of their own. They should decide on a name for their restaurant and the types of food the restaurant will serve. As a final step, groups could write an advertisement for their restaurants.
